II. TEXT

Uniform of the Vietnam People's Army (VPA) is a system of uniforms for soldiers and officers at all levels in the service branches and branches of VPA.

Faced with the specific requirements of military operations and building the VPA in the new revolutionary period, gradually modernizing and integrating into the world, the Ministry of National Defense has repeatedly proposed policies.

Currently, our military uniforms are specified in detail: usual uniform, ceremonial uniform, combat uniforms, uniform for each military zone, arm, forces and specific characteristics of each person on duty.

Uniforms of the VPA are called according to the names used for each type of uniform; consists of:

1. Ceremonial Uniforms
2. Usual uniforms
3. Combat uniforms
4. Uniforms of service and work clothes.

Commanders of agencies and units must strictly abide by the regulations of the Ministry of National Defense; military uniforms of different styles and colors are not allowed to be used; regulations on wearing and using military uniforms contrary to regulations.

Wearing uniforms must be following each type, each season and only military uniforms and costumes produced and distributed by the army may be used. Do not use military uniforms as plain clothes. Officers and Warrant officers outside working hours, when not on duty, and when participating in activities outside, are allowed to wear plain clothes.

The VPA uniform has contributed to the improvement of military posture and working style, demonstrating the qualities of the "Uncle Ho's soldier" of the people, by the people, and for the people. In international relations, our military uniforms have integrated with the armies of other countries in the world in terms of aesthetics, elegance, power, and modernity.

Since the establishment of our Army until now, the uniform of the army has changed a lot, continuously improved in terms of design, color, and material... but never fully equipped, unified, and modern as it is today. K.08 officer uniforms together with K.03 and K.07 soldiers' uniforms have created a beauty, meeting the requirements of building an increasingly regular and modern army in the new period.
