II. TEXT

In Vietnamese waters, the Vietnam Coast Guard has the function of managing security, order, and safety and ensuring the observance of Vietnam's laws, and international treaties to which the Socialist Republic of Vietnam is a signatory and international agreement under its jurisdiction. In case for the purpose of religious education, peace, crime prevention, and law violations, the Vietnam Coast Guard may operate outside Vietnamese waters.

With the tradition of "Resolutely brave, overcome difficulties, unite, synergize, strictly abide by the law", over the years, Vietnam Coast Guard officers and soldiers have made unremitting efforts to build and perfect, fostering the core values of the Vietnam Coast Guard soldier: "Responsibility - Discipline - Righteousness".

In recent years, the global and regional situation, especially the situation in the East Sea, has become complicated and unpredictable, with many new situations appearing in both traditional and non-traditional security aspects. In terms of traditional security, there are disputes over sovereignty over sea and islands and maritime delimitation (bilateral and multilateral) among countries along the East Sea. In terms of non-traditional security, there is an increase in organized and transnational crimes related to drugs, arms trafficking, human trafficking, smuggling, commercial fraud, piracy, terrorism, armed robbery against ships, and climate change (sea level rise) natural disasters, unusual storms, epidemics, the marine environment pollution.

In addition to patrolling, inspection, control, and law enforcement activities to protect sovereignty, sovereign rights, and national jurisdiction, and protect organizations and individuals participating in marine economic development activities; another important function of the Vietnam Coast Guard is to fight against crimes and law violations in Vietnamese waters to maintain security, order, and safety at sea.

Stemming from the trend of international cooperation of countries in the world today is to implement the policy of expanding international relations, giving priority to the direction of the sea; along with the advantages of the 4.0 technology revolution, organized crime organizations, transnational (regional, global) have rapidly expanded their scope and operational area with increasingly dangerous methods. Their scope of impact is not only limited to the region but also on a global scale. To effectively combat such international crimes at sea, a single country cannot do well but needs the practical cooperation of many countries and international institutions in the regions and around the world.

Vietnam Coast Guard is a law enforcement force representing Vietnam operating in Vietnamese waters and international waters; uses the seal bearing the national emblem to perform assigned functions and tasks. To improve the effectiveness of the fight against crime and law violations at sea, the Vietnam Coast Guard has promoted international relations activities in both breadth and depth, establishing hotlines with the Coast Guard Law Enforcement in 09 countries in the region; establishing strong cooperative relations with partner countries of ASEAN, many maritime powers and international organizations in the world in the field of maintaining security, order, and safety at sea.

The above contents can be clearly seen through the practice of fighting against smuggling, commercial fraud, and illegal transportation of goods at sea. The Vietnam Coast Guard has implemented many solutions synchronously, including closely coordinating with Vietnamese functional forces (Border Guards, Police, Customs, Maritime Inspectors, Market Managers, etc..) and neighboring countries (Malaysia, Indonesia, Philippines, China, Cambodia, Thailand...); collect, share information, grasp the situation, strengthen patrol, inspection, and control in key sea areas; promote and improve the quality and efficiency of coordination in organizing professional activities, proactively detecting, promptly preventing and fighting crimes of smuggling, commercial fraud, and illegal transportation of goods at sea. During the deployment process, the Vietnam Coast Guard at the same time promoted propaganda, popularized legal education for fishermen, and participated in building the people's security posture associated with the all-people national defense posture to protect the country's sovereignty over sea and islands, effectively serving the course of sustainable development of Vietnam's marine economy in the new situation.

III. GRAMMAR

Conditional sentences type 1

a) Use

- The Conditional sentence type 1 is used to express a possible condition and a probable in the future.

Eg: If I study hard, I will pass this exam.

If she has enough money, she will buy a new car.

- Note:

+ English uses a present tense in the condition clause, not a future form.

Eg: If this ship enters the harbour,...(not If this ship will enter the harbour)

+ “If” expresses a possibility that something will happen. “When” expresses what the speaker sees as certain to happen.

Eg: If I find the pilot chart, I'll send it to you.

When the fire team is ready, we'll rope off the fire area.

b) Form

- Positive and negative:

If + S + V (present simple), S + will/ won't + V (infinitive)

Eg: If we transmit an alarm signal to vessels in the vicinity, all the vessels have to pay attention.

If you are late, I won't wait for you.

- Interrogative:

Will + S + V(infinitive) + if + S + V (present simple)?

Eg: Will you attend Australian Defence Force Academy if you pass your exam? Yes, I will.

- Wh-question:

Wh + will + S + V(infinitive) + if + S + V(present simple)?

Eg: What will you do if you attend Australian Defence Force Academy?

- Note: The conditional clause "if" can come at the beginning of the sentence or at the end. If it comes at the beginning, we put a comma at the end of the clause. If it comes at the end, we don't use a comma.

Eg: If he studies hard, he'll pass this exam.

He'll pass this exam if he studies hard.
