II. TEXT

In order to build regularity, practice discipline, and create a common unity in the entire force, all officers and soldiers of the Vietnam Coast Guard while working or participating in work on ships of the Vietnam Coast Guard must strictly abide by the Command of the Vietnam Coast Guard ships.

The command of the Vietnam Coast Guard ships regulates the basic principles, organization, and combat preparation work on the Vietnam Coast Guard ships. Thereby, the Vietnam Coast Guard officers and soldiers on the payroll of the Vietnam Coast Guard ships and all other subjects, in general, must understand and perform well some basic requirements on staffing organization, regime, study, and work. Studying and training following the Vietnam Coast Guard ship's Command helps learners improve the efficiency of etiquette, manners, and strict observance, creating a basis for all officers and soldiers on the ship and other subjects to practice and strictly implement responsibilities and duties in all aspects of work; is a premise to return to good work at other ship units later.

Depending on the type of ships, there will be payrolls of different branches and combat positions, but basically, the organizational system has many similarities, specifically:

- Commanding officer
- Political commissar
- Head of industry, team leaders

The branches on the ship are organized for the purpose of exploiting and using weapons, equipment and technical equipment to the highest efficiency.

Industries on the ship include:

- Navigation section, symbol “I”
- Weapon system section, symbol “II”
- General section, symbol “III”
- Communication and rada section, symbol “IV”
- Electricity and Engine section, symbol “V”
- Military medical crew, symbol “KY”
- Flight assurance crew, symbol “KB”.

The rescue team on the multi-purpose patrol ship is established when there is a situation and disbanded when the mission is over.

The patrol, inspection and control team is established when going to sea and it disbands itself after completing the mission.

Besides the branches on the warship, it is possible to organize divisions, and groups, in charge of machines, batteries, and combat positions below the branches.

Ships of the Vietnam Coast Guard are a great asset that the Party, the State, the Central Military Commission (CMC), and the Ministry of Defense equip for the Vietnam Coast Guard to perform its assigned functions and tasks; including patrol ships, specialized ships, service ships, boats, and floating facilities.

Based on the organization of personnel, weapons, technical equipment and function, duties of the ship, operating range, displacement, technical features, and tactics to decentralize the decentralization prescribed by Commandant of the Vietnam Coast Guard. The Vietnam Coast Guard ships are classified into 5 levels, the highest being level 1.

In addition, the Vietnam Coast Guard Ship Order also stipulates the wearing and use of uniforms, professional attire, and aircraft on the Vietnam Coast Guard ships, general regulations when boarding and disembarking ships, and regulations on professional law work, international relations, logistics, and technical work on the Vietnam Coast Guard ships.

III. GRAMMAR

1. Imperative sentence

- An imperative sentence gives advice or instructions; it can also express a request or command. These kinds of sentences are also known as directives because they provide direction to whoever is being addressed.

- Types of Imperative Sentences:

Directives can take one of several forms in everyday speech and writing. A few of the most common uses include:

+ A request: Pack enough clothing for the cruise.

+ An invitation: Come by at 8, please.

+ A command: Raise your hands and turn around.

+ An instruction: Turn left at the intersection.

Imperative sentences can be confused with other kinds of sentences. The trick is to look at how the sentence is constructed.

- “You” are the Subject

Imperative sentences may seem to have no subject, but the implied subject is you, or, as it is properly called, you understood. The proper way to write the subject is (you) in parenthesis, especially when diagramming an imperative sentence. Even when a proper name is mentioned in an imperative sentence, the subject still is understood.

Eg: Jim, close the door before the cat gets out! The subject is (you), not Jim.

- Modifying an imperative sentence:

At their most basic, imperative sentences are binary, which is to say they must be either positive or negative. Positive imperatives use affirmative verbs in addressing the subject; negatives do the opposite.

- + Positive: Keep both hands on the steering wheel while you're driving.

- + Negative: Don't operate the lawnmower without wearing safety goggles.

Adding the words "do" or "just" to the beginning of the sentence, or the word "please" to the conclusion— called softening the imperative —makes imperative sentences more polite or conversational.

Softened imperatives: Do your chores, please. Just sit here, won't you?

As with other forms of grammar, imperative sentences can be modified to address a particular subject, follow a proprietary written style, or simply add variety and emphasis to your writing.

- Adding emphasis:

Imperative sentences also can be modified to single out a particular person or to address a group. This can be accomplished in one of two ways: by following the interrogative with a tag question or by closing with an exclamation point.

+ Tag question: Shut the door, would you, please?

+ Exclamation: Someone, call a doctor!

Doing so in both instances adds emphasis and drama to speech and writing.
